

A GREAT BIG SHINING STAR

Sixteen-year-old Grace may be from a small coastal village but she's not staying there. She has huge dreams, and knows from television and magazines that she can get to the big city, she can be a star, simply by changing from a duckling to a swan. It doesn't take much: a little silicone and surgery here and there – enhancement and augmentation –...

Reader's Opinions

This is the best book I've read this year. It made me flinch, frequently, with its unblinking account of bodily distress, surgery, distortion, the suffering of spiders, the tiny murders that occur every millisecond in this mad beautiful world. It frequently made me laugh and want to cheer at how effectively Niall Griffiths demolishes...

I thought grits was much better. A bit too much flowery ranting in between snippets of hard core porn and a depressing view of modern life.
