

DARLING JACK

JACK HAZARD NEEDED A WIFE And Anna Matlin was the perfect woman for the job. Though she seemed like a timid mouse, Jack was convinced that the file clerk possessed a multitude of charms. Charms that he would soon expose as he drew her into his dangerous game of revenge. Anna's colorless existence ended the day she became the "wife" of her hero, Jack Hazard. But though she was learning that beneath the legendary Pinkerton detective's...

Reader's Opinions

Pinkerton Agent Jack Hazard needed a woman to pose as his wife. Since no female agents were available, file clerk Anna Matlin was chosen for the job. Anna's colorless existence ended the day she became the "wife" of her hero, Jack Hazard. Though she learned that beneath the Detective's dashing exterior was a haunted, lonely man, Anna...

One of the first romance books I read that realistically portrayed an alcoholic. This hero falls off the wagon, but it's not the end of the world, because Mary loves him and is there to help him, although the hardest part is his.
