Reader's Opinions

(2.5) Manchester-based Anthony Trevelyan blends postcolonial bureaucracy with steampunk zaniness in his debut novel. The setup, reminiscent of Graham Greene or even Heart of Darkness, is familiar enough: businessmen head overseas to take financial advantage of a former colony, puzzle over unfamiliar customs and inner turmoil, and by...

This fabulous story defies categorisation and that's a good thing in my mind. I started it thinking it was going to be a bit science geeky - after all it is about the quest to buy an anti-gravity machine (that may or may not exist). In fact it's much more a character-driven piece. Steven the...
