Peek Inside the Book

What kills a person at twenty-five? Leukemia. An accident. But George knows the better odds are that someone who passes at that age dies of unhappiness. Drug overdose. Suicide. Reckless behavior. Scott Turow, Limitations //

Reader's Opinions

Set in an imaginative Kindle County in the backdrop of a rape case, Limitations by Scott Turow is good but not as gripping as some of John Grishams legal thrillers. Elderly judge is perhaps facing the most trying case in his entire career. On the dock are four young men being tried for allegedly raping a teenage girl. This would...

I have always enjoyed Scott Turow. Legal "thrillers" almost always leave me unable to suspend disbelief, because, as a lawyer, I rankle at the obvious legal flaws introduced by authors either unintentionally (by those who wouldn't know better) or intentionally (by even such greats as John Grisham) in order to make the plot work. I cannot...
