Reader's Opinions

I found the premise of The Perfect Murder by Peter James to be implausible two people in an unhappy marriage plotting to kill each other. Why didn't they just get a divorce or separate? Apart from the constant bickering there seemed no motive for murder, no great monetary incentive and no children to consider. However I have since read...

A good intro to Peter James for those that have not read him before but too short to engross or have any 'red herrings' dangled so the outcome is pretty obvious from the outset. His actual novels are far far better....although still, at times, transparent in their pending culmination.
